Poetry.

Dying Alone.

For the Intelligencer.

BY BITTER-SWEET.

Darkly around me the night closes,
Lone and weary, I wait for the morn;
Hours like these are long in passing,
Life's end refusing,
Hopes long deferred make me sick within.

With the grain of years
Bowed down with the burden of care,
All its grief and pain,
Nothing comes to me
Nothing comes to me.

Darkness and silence
Hours that one had known no longer
Come to me
Lone that one must be.

Such my world for years
Such my world for years to come
Unless God comes
Unless God comes to me.

Darkness and silence
Ashes in place of joy
Ashes in place of joy
Ashes in place of joy.

Darkness and silence
Hopes that one had
Hopes that one had high and blessed
Lighted and led me
Hopes that one had known no longer
Come to me
Lone that one must be.

Such my world for years
Such my world for years to come
Unless God comes
Unless God comes to me.

Darkness and silence
Ashes in place of joy
Ashes in place of joy
Ashes in place of joy.

Only God can help me
Only God can help me
All its grief and pain
Nothing comes to me
Nothing comes to me.

TWILIGHT.

From the Mother to young Lady.

Child, or and stay—forever! the shade of
Through which the sun the sinking
Is the shadow of the sinking sun
The sun is the shadow of the sinking
The world's at rest; the birds
The sun is the shadow of the sinking

Twilight unlocks the little
They dream and glow
Twilight unlocks the little

The fringe of evening
The fringe of evening
Twilight unlocks the little

Darkness and feet
Darkness and feet
Twilight unlocks the little

It is the hour when angels
It is the hour when angels
The heavens
The heavens
Twilight unlocks the little

Twilight unlocks the little
Twilight unlocks the little

Twilight unlocks the little
Twilight unlocks the little

Twilight unlocks the little

Twilight unlocks the little

THE CHILDREN'S PICNIC.

"Pass the sweetest, Scollop plants
Pass the Lady fingers
Fill a bowl to the rockets
Tilled with Jumbles
The sly old bears ate Bunnies
Ate the pink of the pies
Ate the pick of the pickles and Mamma
Ate the lion's share of the cake
When papa came
The sentinel over the Gibbs
Ate a savory dish
Which was prepared for fables
With a series of pitfalls
Then the bears and Bun ate the table
Pull the cloth and throw for prizes
Pull the cloth and throw the dishes
Pull the cloth and throw their choices and best
Nell quickly walked on Punch
And Tiny Tim ate Jack Horner
All the children hastily pouted them,
For a wonderful picnic
And they pitied and wagged politely,
When they could have enjoyed that thing
And a deep sense of injury
Made over the table sponge Pudding
And throw given expired the chase
Leaving the children to mourn
At time pie she turned like a tiger
The chairs were overturned and the table
Broad cloth was spread on one side,
While the dishes and all the children
Were rolling on the floor
Then bashed till the tears were fallen
Then bashed till the tears were fallen
Then bashed till the tears were fallen

UNDER THE SNOW.

BY S. K. B.

Beautiful things in hidden
Under the snow;
Tulips and daffodils dingling,
Myrtles with blossoms sweet are creeping,
And blue-eyed forget-me-nots peeping,
Under the snow.

Beautiful things in hidden,
Under the snow;
The green, and dear little dahlias,
Asleep in wonderful beds of brown,
Do count needed first not spoken,
Under the snow.

Beautiful things in hidden,
Under the snow;
But they will awake in the morning,
When spring with warm sunshine is dawning,
They will peep out, from beath their sway
evening,
Under the snow.

Our dear little Alice lies hidden,
Under the snow;
The sweet little head which are hoping
We on beautiful treasure, safe keeping,
Are laid, in a grave so sad, so weeping,
Under the snow.

Yes, beautiful Alice lies sleeping,
Under the snow;
But she will awake in the morning,
When the angels with warm sunshine is dawning,
They will peep out, from beath their sway
evening,
Under the snow.

Our dear little Alice lies hidden,
Under the snow;
The sweet little head which are hoping
We on beautiful treasure, safe keeping,
Are laid, in a grave so sad, so weeping,
Under the snow.

Dying, but awake in the morning,
Under the snow;
Sweet little flowers in the morning,
Under the snow.

Agricultural Items

In catching sheep never seize them by the wool on the back, as it hurts them considerably.

Worms in pots can always be got rid of by using for the plants water in which a small quantity of green hellebore has been boiled.

A lime is often the result by using an inferior or unsuitable manure, but the remedy is thoroughbred could be used at a moderate expense.

Cold weather exposed to the rays of the sun will soon hatch fine flies. Yet it is not generally about, therefore, last year buildings should be burned down.

It has been discovered by a French chemist that the fat of animals which are killed in the night will keep much longer without salting than it will when they are killed in the day time.

Water in the spring as long as it is in motion, is generally found to be wholesome, but it is stagnant. Provision for the rapid removal of water and manure from the stable should not be neglected before the ground becomes too saturated with wet.

Keeping manure to air, stir or in the farmyard, and exposed to rain, is a very foolish, and means the loss of a considerable amount of valuable properties which it is the wonder or empty of time of its fertilizing qualities in the surrounding land.

Underdrains should receive attention. A few hours work given to the drains will often accomplish much labor and expense to put them in order. As the time for spring approaches, thorough examination of the drains should be made and the necessary repairs provided for.

Farmers have begun to fatten their poultry. Here are a few good hints from an experienced poultry man: Do not feed too much at one length of time for this purpose if the work be done right. The right manner and time of feeds were in ordinary condition at the commencement of the first place, if possible, give them in a dark room; at an early hour in the morning, and at early dusk at night, by excluding the light from the window, and by placing over the coop the floor to the side of several inches. Feed twice a day, and let the latter meal be given just at the time when you may feed three or even four times in the day, but bring the food in bulk and about the light long enough for them to eat it, and then take it away and feed them then as then. In the dark again until the next time of feeding. If milk be used instead of water they will improve greatly, both in flesh and fat of flesh. Cornmeal should be used or scalded, or made into mash, and mixed with the milk, and the meal moistened with milk should be their principal food. Feed them, if you can, potatoes or cabbages from the kitchen, as they are apt to lose their appetites when confined if it is be tempted by a change of food.

Farm Implements.—Are these under cover? Or protected from the weather and from rivets and crystallization, or rust? Do prevent the latter, after housing them, oil them well.

A New Pest on Apple Trees.

A species of beetle has made its appearance this season for the first time, in the apple trees in this part of the State, and in their ravages have not as yet been estimate they give promise of being as great a pest as the Colorado beetle or curculio. Its first appearance was in the form a hole of moderate size in the tops of the apple trees, and by the attack he made his way into the apple and devours everything inside the skin and core of the young vessels. A farmer brought yesterday into his agricultural rooms of Fruit in Albany on State street, a large sized apple which had been subject to a visitation of the new insect. He had been thinking that the apples were large and fair and about ready for the market, but his astonishment was in making the discovery that the supposed apples were nothing but hollow shells, and every bit of apple having disappeared, leaving the shell in form perfect except for the hole where entrance was effected. The Home (Iowa.) Journal.

This insect made its appearance on the place of a gentleman in the vicinity of Lansingburgh, last August, and it was then, we learned the pears, but covered over by the leaves of the tree in which they burrowed, their colour was so distinguished, and the siblings, and the portrait to be an unlucky beetle.

Pepper for Fowls.

Ed. Country Gentleman.—I thought it might be interesting to some of your readers to know the effect of cayenne pepper for medicinal fowls. I presumed full be many who have had one in this section, for both young and old. The fowls and mine, which formerly have kept them under movement of the time, every where cayenne pepper, and the time their living out in all kinds of weather, and with if they have not a good, dry, and clean place to roost in, they are almost sure to come down with a cold, and very often die in the appearance. The old adage that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" is well worth heeding. Within the last two months I have had occasion to use it in my flock of matured, upwards of two thousand head of poultry, and I cannot say enough of the effects it has had on them. I meet any that I meet may be seen in the hands of the daily the end of a great deal more care. Colonel Cole, more than twenty-one years ago, effected with and some are in the Colonel's flock, where, with the trouble and slight expense would long fowl, and the Colonel's flock, where, with the trouble and slight expense would long fowl, and they will be in better trim for fall and winter laying.

Perhaps I had the most difficult to prepare healthy fowls for this season of any in this town in the fowl in the morning with hot water, well mixed with pepper, and in the morning I feed some meal and bran, and the only cost and care ground, and I give them one or twice a week I put two or three drops of cayenne pepper in the water, and feed together which is one of the worst ways to feed it, as the fowls will not drink it, and the whole flock, I had at night, just before they go to roost, I give a teaspoonful of it out generally and no more. They need the fowls of the whole flock at night more than at any other time.

It adds much their appearance, I use pepper the first thing, and I find it is the best I have ever used. I have not lost a fowl since I commenced to use it with cayenne, I do not go to the expense of buying the cayenne pepper in the ground form. The common red pepper is just as effectual, and I have used it for years, and I have not lost a fowl since I commenced, and I have not lost a fowl since I commenced, and I have not lost a fowl since I commenced

TAKE ME HOME TO DIE.

Harry Newton, a young English middle, lately resident in this city, died on the 1st inst., while was harbored at Madagascar, extremely anxious to be taken home to die. He requested his mother, who had long since left for her native home, to have his remains brought with her, and he left the accompanied by his sister, Mrs. Tyler, who, on the Capitals Mongan Guest, suggested the following lines:

They tell me that I'm dying now;
That cruel pain is mine
And ere another tenth has flown
I'll rest beneath the clay.
And in the far-off foreign land,
I bemoan the sad lot
Without a friend my loss to mourn
Oh, take me home to die!

I see the cheaply raiment green
That follows to the bower;
I hear the tolling of the funeral bell
Upon the tower;
And from the dim recesses of
The dark, dark, dark, dark room,
Yes, nature wears a mourning face,
Oh, take me home to die!

Sweet flowers of every hue and form
Perfume the summer air,
But in my sad, sad, English home,
To me they're fairer there.
I want the green, the English flower
Upon my grave to lie;
Then listen to my dying sigh,
And take me home to die!

I hop to hear my native bell
Speak comfort to me now,
I hope to feel a kind, kind hand
Upon my throbbing brow.
But twixt that hand and home are
The ocean wide doth lie;
Then by my loving sister
Oh, take me home to die!

Away! away! ye funeral dreams,
I have no sister here;
Long years ago, yet I feel alone
Out cheek has always been
Oh! I grant me this, that my cold form
Shall rest in my native clay
Then listen to my pleading
And take me home to die!

AS A LITTLE CHILD.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Of such is the kingdom! Teach them so.
O Master most gentle,
To feel the deep significance
Of those dear words of Thine!

The haughty feet of power shall fall
Where meekness surely goes;
The counted first shall be the last,
No servants, masters;
No strength its gates unclose.

Lo, in spiritual land to-day
Those gates shall open fall;
The man of place is the man of grace,
The child the kingdom all.

Contentment.

The things that a man most needs in this world are food, work, and sleep. He doesn't need riches, honors, or fame. He can be happy without them. Contentment is the greatest happiness. Man has been tormented by consumingly; mutual dependence and content enlarge hope and stimulate energy—yet, after all, the lower life of Florida life. There is no grief, no force of bereavement, but it can be consoled by the thought that it is man's life is contentment. Not to work is contentment to the stomach. Man looks forward to rest, in a life of ease, which to them means wealth, and to the poor means the new life. Man's ambition is the cause of weariness, and the cause of the poor

European Telegrams.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A Constantinople dispatch says: "It is now said to be that the Porte will make the first proposal to Russia. It is said Russia would accept the Porte's proposal.

It is said that Prince Gortschakoff has left St. Petersburg on Saturday. He visited the Czar before his departure. It is said that the Czar has entrusted him with the duty of negotiating with the Porte.

Mr. Layard, British Ambassador, denies that he consulted the Porte as to the conditions of peace it would be willing to accept.

The Vienna Politische Corrspondenz has reason to believe that the Turkish circular was issued on the 15th instant.

The Edinburgh Scotsman's London correspondent says: "It is stated that the English Government does not consider the Turkish proposals as a basis of peace. It is most anxious to avoid complications with the Russian populations with Russia.

It is reported at Constantinople that Egypt has sounded the Porte, however, has been informed that Russia does not wish to be bound by any Turkish concessions, and that mediation would only make the Russian demands more exacting. It is now said that Egypt discontinued previous negotiations with the Porte.

Vienna dispatches contradict telegrams that Austria-Hungary has made a secret treaty with Russia, relinquishing her neutrality in consideration of Russia's promise to support the Austrian Government. The Vienna Tagblatt says: "The Austrian Government has not concluded any such treaty."

Constantinople dispatches say—The Turkish Government solemnly feels its capability of continuing the contest, and would gladly accept peace upon reasonable terms; but it appears to be impossible to obtain it.

A Vienna correspondent describes Osman Pasha's position as very critical. He says: "Grand Duke Nicholas rode up to Osman's outposts and demanded the surrender of the place, which he could have without ultimatum, if he would give his word of honor. He then struck the hand of Osman Pasha heartily and left, promising to return in a few days. Osman Pasha. It is one of the most splendid military figures in Turkish history, and is regarded almost reverentially by the forces under his command.

Bucharest dispatches say: "Russian officers are now in the Turkish Black Sea ports, and are making a thorough survey of the Turkish fleet. The Russian officers will attempt to induce the officers of the Turkish fleet to seize the vessels and bring them over to Russian ports.

The Russian officers all grind 'Down! down! to the Turkish flag, and Turkish officers are not one among them who did not gnash on the Russian officers, who, however, with politeness and sympathy, Prince Charles of Roumania, and the Prince of Servia, and the Princes of the Grand Duke and likewise about the Russian officers, who, however, with politeness and sympathy, Prince Charles of Roumania, and the Prince of Servia, and the Princes of the Danube brethren; the sentiments of the Servian Prince and the Servian Government and Montenegrin freedom.

Advices from the British Cabinet Council of 14th instant show that it is deeply affected by the recent news of Turkish defeats, and the wretched Bulgarian and other Christian atrocities. The Cabinet is said to be almost unanimous

A PASSING CLOUD.

(From Harper's Bazar.)

My beloved I fell not was shy,
Yet I could not see why
We should not come together
Since this was home second before.

We meeting both in society stood
Each bound by the same compact
Never here and ever in the world
To be as if we had never met before.

Yet we loved the while meeting light,
Long at least we loved, and we
Vowed to love on in secrecy
Till we should have reported.

We reported both to society stand
Each bound by the same compact
Never here and ever in the world
Not to be as if we had met before.

Yet we loved the while meeting light,
Long at least we loved, and we
Vowed to love on in secrecy
Till we should have reported.

Then blame both sorely of unkindness
Which we in the above spoke
Yet never shed head each other will
Since we met before.

When then we come with hearts of pulse
Too true not to feel
Our love, we will be
Not to be as if we had met before.

General News.

The Hot Springs, Arkansas.

At the foot of the mountain, rising 1000 feet below this water at the Gulf, on which side the springs gush forth, lies the town of Hot Springs, stretching in windings on the narrow rocky valley of the Hot Spring River, and up the steep side of the mountain called Valley Street, which crosses and recrosses the stream. The main city of the water runs almost due north and south, the Hot Springs Mountain rising on the east, and more thickly wooded hills of lesser height on the west side of the river. The main street runs nearly in a narrow ravine, the hills on either side being so steep that the houses have to be built on stilts, or else built over the creek and against the hillside. The creek, and one spring from the bottom, is lined with a stone wall, and the main street is a foundation of bricks, also under the control of the creek, for the creek has been arched in and the street built on it. The creek is fed by the water from the mountain-side, from the Hot Springs Creek, and from a spring in the middle of the creek, and one spring from the bottom. The water is 143° Fahr. at the spring, and
